The Hartford Herald

WASHINGTON, April 29—Reporters for the Associated Press have con- verged to Washington from all points of John Adams’ beloved country to attend the opening of the club. The atmosphere was electric. The club was to be opened with a reception and dinner, attended by many prominent guests. The club is to be devoted to the promotion of cultural and educational activities, and it is expected to become a center of social and intellectual life in the city. The club will be housed in a building on the corner of Main and Market Streets, and it will be available for public use. In addition to the reception and dinner, the club will host a variety of events, such as concerts, lectures, and debates. The club is expected to become a hub of activity and intellectual exchange for the city’s residents.

The Art Exhibit